Dear Mary: What's Etiquette On Engagement?

BY MARY HAWORTH Q: Will you please help me find the right words to say to a boy and girl who are about to be engaged? What must I say when he gives her the ring? I know it sounds stupid of me, but it's a fact that I can't think what to say. Thank you. G. P. A: I assume that the girl is your daughter and that you are the male parent. It appears that she and the boy plan to make their engagement official by asking your permission formally, after which—when you've said yes, as they expect you to—the boy will place the ring on her finger.

Then comes the question: what do you say next? Well, it is an awkward moment for a non-gabby type of person. For example, if you are a warm-hearted, outgoing sort of person, you might clasp the pair in your arms, in a fleeting bear hug and say kindly: "God bless you and keep you; be good to each other." But if you are shy, reserved, accustomed to wearing a poker face to hide your deep feelings, you might just shake hands with the boy and say: "Welcome into the family, John." And then to your daughter: "May I see the ring again? It's a beauty, isn't it?" If I have guessed wrong and you are the mother, godmother, grandmother or aunt, the same suggestions still apply.—M. H. Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Enquirer.

HINTS from HELOISE

DEAR HELOISE: How many recipes start with: "cook two slices of bacon until crisp. Brown diced onion in fat . . ." I save myself lots of effort and money by preparing two or three diced onions in bacon fat left from breakfast bacon. The actual bacon is seldom vital to the recipe. I keep the onions in the refrigerator. If you don't need the onions for a recipe, they're also tasty when added to the scrambled eggs for breakfast or some other dish or vegetable.—V. S. N.

Praise Boosts Dieter's Morale

BY IDA JEAN KAIN PRAISE IS sweet music to the ears . . . particularly for a dieter. On seeing a dietitian friend whom I had not seen for a year, I spontaneously greeted her with "Why, you're slimmer! I've never seen you look so beautifully well!" Her response was a grateful "Oh, thank you for noticing! I've lost 16 pounds and nobody has so much as mentioned it!"

Praise is a needed morale booster. It helps to anticipate in advance how your friends and relations are likely to react to your reducing efforts. If you expect wholehearted praise from overweight friends, you may be let down. One reducer wrote recently: "My friends and neighbors are no help, particularly those who should be reducing. They coax me to sit down and have cake and coffee with them." Psychologists explain it this way: The fact that you are dieting gives your overweight friends a guilty feeling. If they are not ready to take needed action, they may, perhaps unconsciously, be a bit put out because you are dieting.

Is it best to keep your diet a secret? No, but it is wise not to indulge in too much talk about reducing, except to another dieter. This is one reason why reducing clubs are helpful. Club members are eager to rejoice with you over every lost pound.

What you are looking for is a reward for your dieting efforts. You will, of course, be rewarded by seeing the difference on the scales and in the fit of your clothes—but this takes time. A warning: Be prepared for the friend who says that you look tired, and comments that she liked you better with more weight. Respond by telling her you feel great, just great! Let her see how much happier you are with less weight.

CINCINNATI FLORIST HELPS PANICKY BRIDES

A bride's best friend is her florist—if the florist is Mrs. Frances Poetker. There's almost nothing she won't do to help a wedding go smoothly. One time, for instance, when the ushers were snow-bound in another city, Mrs. Poetker rustled up stand-ins from her flower shop staff.

This week, The Saturday Evening Post brings you a five-page picture story of the Cincinnati florist. The Post tells how Mrs. Poetker once soothed a panicky bride by putting sandpaper on the soles of her shoes. How she whipped up a wedding cake out of a hatbox during a bakers' strike. And why one of her biggest successes was furnishing flowers for an Irish "wake."
